3-[1-(4-fluorophenyl)piperidin-4-yl]propionamides were synthesized and tested in vivo for antagonistic activity on 5-hydroxytryptamine (5-HT)₄ receptors using the rat duodenal contraction test and in vitro for their ability to inhibit the effect of 5-HT released from the rat cerebral cortex and rat spinal cord. In vivo, compound 14 exhibited the best 5-HT₄ receptor antagonistic activity in rats with an ED₅₀ value of 2.2 mg/kg. Compound 14 also produced an increase in the release of 5-HT from cerebral cortex slices and a decrease in the release of 5-HT from spinal cord slices, whereas compound 3 showed higher 5-HT₄ receptor affinity and lower 5-HT release than did compound 14. When the receptor affinities of compounds 1-6 were compared with compound 14 and Tiotropium, compound 14 was identified as a potent 5-HT₄ receptor antagonist, providing an important basis for further developing orally active 5-HT₄ receptor antagonists for the treatment of central nervous system disorders.
