I'm storing a list of picture urls in SQLite. I'd like to periodically remove the oldest urls from the DB and store the current set. Is it possible to force the re-use of a table in SQLite? Or is the best approach to write a script that deletes the old records and re-inserts the new ones into a new table? A: As far as I'm aware, SQLite doesn't have any concept of tables. It stores data as a collection of tables, but does not necessarily have a concept of a table and where its records are kept. Thus, you can delete the old urls and re-insert the new ones into a new table. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to parallel computing systems. More specifically, the present invention relates to a method of installing and executing a compiler program for vectorizing and parallelizing source code for execution on a parallel computing system. 2. Description of Related Art Parallel computing systems may include multiple processing units (PUs) which execute programs which parallelize the input tasks presented to the computing system. One example of a parallel computer is a massively parallel computer. A massively parallel computer is a parallel computer that may be custom configured for a specific application, such as performing complex mathematical problems. By a massive parallel computer, it is meant that the computational capacity of the parallel computer may be measured in teraflops or higher. A specific implementation of a massively parallel computer is described in U.S. Pat. No. 6,377,636 issued Apr. 23, 2002 to Duan et al., assigned to SGI. While a massively parallel computer is well-suited for applications which can use the massively parallel computer's computational power, the massively parallel computer may not be suitable for applications which require only less computational power. Thus, a parallel computing system may be tailored to the requirements of a particular application. One example of a parallel computing system is a cluster computing system.
